III. Biography

Mei I (China)

Mei I was born in 1915 at Swatow in Kwangtung province. His status as a publicist is roughly equal to that of ^{TEN}Teng To ^{cap.}Wu ~~Long~~ hsi and Chin [?] Chung-hua. Like these men Mei I first established his reputation as a newspaperman.

As director of the Broadcasting Affairs Bureau of Peiping's State Council and a vice president of the ^{ALL CHINA JOURNALISTS ASSOCIATION}China Journalistic Workers Association, ^{MEI I ranks high among those leaders charged with the conduct}Mei I ranks among the leading executors of Chinese Communist propaganda policy. In addition he has served one term as president of the International Radio and Television Organization (1953).

Mei I joined the ^{China}Chinese Communist Party ^{before}sometime prior to 1937 when he was engaged in newspaper work in Shanghai. After the Sino-Japanese war broke out he took part in activities of the League of Leftist Writers in Shanghai and Hong Kong. Before 1949 Mei I served as a member of the administrative board and deputy chief editor of the New China News Agency. When the People's Republic of China was organized, he was appointed deputy director of the Broadcast Bureau of the News Administration. When the latter was abolished in 1952, Mei I became director of the Bureau of Broadcasting Enterprises. When the Peiping regime was reorganized in 1954, he was appointed to his present position as director of the Broadcasting Affairs Bureau.

In 1954 Mei I became a member of the board of directors of the Chinese People's Association for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries as well as a deputy in the First National People's Congress. In 1956 he was chosen as a member of the Central Work Committee for the Popularization of Standard and Spoken Chinese. From 1949 to 1952 Mei I served as ^{N^o} alternate member of the First National Committee of the All China Federation of Democratic Youth, and since 1949 he has been a member of the Chinese People's ^{Pol. Bureau} Consultative Conference.

Mei's travel abroad has included a trip to Budapest in 1952 and a trip to Prague in 1953 to attend meetings of the International Radio and Television Organization.

Sergey Vasil'yevich Kaftanov

S. V. Kaftanov was born in 1907 presumably in the ~~Doyets~~^N Basin.

He is said to have completed a factory training course and to be a graduate of the Chemical Technological Institute in Moscow. He is also ~~alleged~~^{stated} to have studied ~~Party~~ propaganda and pedagogical work.

Kaftanov is the ~~Chairman~~ of the State Radio and Television Committee attached to the Central Council of Ministers of the USSR. He began his political career when he was named in 1937 as chairman of the Committee on Affairs of Higher Education attached to the Council of People's Commissars. At the 18th All Union Party Congress held in March 1939 Kaftanov was elected to candidate membership on the ~~Party~~ Central Committee.

In addition to his regular duties Kaftanov served as a member and sometimes as deputy chairman of the Committee on ~~State~~^{STALIN} Prizes in the field of science and invention from 1942-1949. Although not a member of the USSR Academy of Sciences, he served in 1944 as a member of the ~~Academy's~~ Commission on Medical Education.

Kaftanov was appointed Minister of Higher Education in 1946. As such he was ~~Chairman~~ of the Presidium of the Ministry's Council on Scientific Methods. He was a member of the All Union Society for the dissemination of Political and Scientific knowledge in May 1947.

Kaftanov failed to appear among the other members of the Stalin Prize Committee in 1950 nor did he register as a candidate for reelection to the Supreme Soviet in that year. In February 1951 he was transferred to other work and was not subsequently identified until June 1953 when he appeared ^{in the Ministry} First Deputy Minister of Culture.
